

Contents | Author index | Subject index | Search | Home

Case studies in open access publishing. Number three.

in the current issue

Jan... 2004

1. Now that over 90 percent of journals allow some form of open access posting to repositories and personal web pages, in principle, authors could make the better part of research and scholarship open access no matter where they publish. If we all, one hopes, do so in practice in the years to come, perhaps as a result of the persuasive arguments of Stevan Harnad among others, we will have

2. For a list of agencies providing support for the software development, see the Public Knowledge Project

Find other papers on this subject

2822
Web Counter

Contents | Author index | Subject index | Search | Home